FINANCIAL STATE OF FRESNO

Fresno's financial condition continued to improve according to our analysis of its audited financial report for fiscal year 2023, solidifying its status as a Sunshine City. The city earned a "B" grade from Truth in Accounting, with $557.1 million available to cover future bills and a Taxpayer Surplus™ of $2,700.

Fresno's financial position strengthened as revenues exceeded expenditures, driven by a 62% increase in grant revenues. The city's pension systems rebounded from a 7.12% unrealized investment loss in 2022 to a 9.74% unrealized gain in 2023, reinforcing long-term fiscal stability. While the systems appear to be overfunded, it is advisable to maintain this status due to risks associated with volatile investment markets and uncertainties in estimating future funding needs.

Agriculture remains a cornerstone of Fresno's economy, with over 400 commercial crops contributing $8.1 billion in 2022, a slight increase from the previous year. This sector continues to drive jobs, businesses, and local revenues. Despite positive growth, the city must remain cautious of market fluctuations and investment risks to ensure continued progress and long-term financial stability.
